

Candidate Bio:

Hi! I'm a second-year medical student at the UofT, running to be your next CFMS Director of Education. Outside of medicine, you'll find me sketching digital art, doing pilates, or café hopping in Toronto (or wherever I travel!).

I was drawn to this role because I have a passion for advancing equitable and innovative medical education across Canada. I've been deeply involved in advocacy, leadership, and medical education-always with a focus on collaboration and inclusion.

As PB Academy Representative on UofT's Class Council, I've organized professional and social events and built systems to elevate student voices. I've also contributed nationally as the Pre-Clerkship File Lead on the CFMS Education Advocacy Task Force, where I led the disability file and presented three policy projects at the CFMS Day of Action in Halifax, including one on religious inclusion in clinical settings.

I'm also the founder of NeuroBridge, a CFMS Student Innovator Grant-winning nonprofit focused on bridging gaps in neurological health education for underserved communities. I am currently working with CFMS channels to expand this initiative to chapters across Canadian Medical Schools. My passion for medical education shines through roles at the UHN Wilson Centre and in UofT's Students as Teachers Program. I also helped organize the Ontario Student Medical Education Research Conference (OSMERC), shaping the program agenda for 150+ attendees.

If elected as CFMS Director of Education, I hope to continue building bridges between national stakeholders and student voices, with a focus on proactive action, accessibility, and inter-school collaboration.
